To Our Prospective Donors and Sponsors:

Thank you for considering donating to Austin, Crepelle & Ernest Sickey's School for Wards and Domestic Dependent Nations ("ACES School"). The ACES School is a non-profit that was founded by Joseph Austin (Navajo Nation), Adam Crepelle (United Houma), and Ernest Sickey (Coushatta) for the purpose of educating Native Nations, Native people, and folks of all walks of life on the issues affecting Indian Country. More importantly, the ACES School proposes solutions to those issues and teaches its "students" about a new form of economic development: international trade.

At the ACES School, we believe that education is the tool that should be used in solving the issues that Native Nations and Native people face. Those issues we know all too well based on our own experiences as Native people, living and working on reservations. Our approach to education is more than just conferences, workshops, and presentations; it's about reminding Native Nations and Native people that most of the solutions to their problems are already within themselves—their language, culture, identity, songs, prayers, and ceremonies. A wise man named Raymond Austin once said, "When Native people start thinking like Native people again, all our problems will be solved." We believe and know the same to be true. With language comes culture, and with culture comes a new way of thinking, the Native way of thinking. That's what we need to prosper and rebuild as Native Nations.

The purpose of the ACES School is not to make money, but nonetheless, we cannot do what we do without the donations and sponsorships from generous folks, organizations, companies, and entities like you. Thank you for your consideration and we hope you'll become a student of the ACES School!

Sincerely,
